Dear Sir,

It has been brought to notice that newspapers published in India sometimes contain paragraphs indicating where particular regiments or other army units are stationed. Accounts of -- parades, gymkhanas, military tournaments etc. are examples of the ways in which the information is given.

If the circulation of the newspapers were confined to -- India there would be no objection to this, but it is necessary to censor these paragraphs out of copies of the paper leaving India by post for neutral countries, and this generally -- entails the excision of harmless matter on the other side of the page.

To obviate this difficulty I am to suggest that, if there is no objection, the editors may .. be advised to avoid mentioning Units of the Army in India in conjunction with their stations, by using general terms such as British Infantry, -- Indian Cavalry, &c., where stations are mentioned or by omitting names of stations where names of Units are mentioned.

Advertisements are not affected to an appreciable extent, as the excision of an occasional advertisement giving information of this kind would not affect the value of a newspaper to a subscriber in a neutral country.

Yours sincerely
G. S. R. Guedes.
